3. Core Business Insights

A. Regional Performance (Where we make money)

- The West Region is the primary driver of revenue, followed closely by the East Region.
- The Central and South regions contribute the lowest overall sales volumes.
- Actionable Strategy: The marketing team should analyze the high-performing campaigns in the West to replicate those strategies in the lagging South region.

B. Product Category Profitability (What we sell)

- Technology yields the highest total sales and remains the most profitable category due to higher price-point items.
- Office Supplies shows lower individual revenue values but maintains a highly stable, high-volume profit margin due to low overhead costs.
- Furniture generates significant top-line revenue but contributes disproportionately lower net profits. This is driven heavily by high shipping costs and aggressive holiday discounting.
- Actionable Strategy: Implement a strict minimum-order threshold or reduce discount rates on Furniture items to protect net margins.

C. Seasonality & Sales Trends (When they buy)

- Sales trends follow a clear seasonal curve, with lower volumes in Q1 (January/February) and massive spikes occurring in September, November, and December.
- This pattern indicates heavy reliance on corporate procurement cycles and holiday retail shopping.
- Actionable Strategy: Inventory levels should be aggressively scaled up starting in August to prevent stockouts during the high-demand Fall/Winter peak.

D. Customer Concentration

- A select group of high-value individual buyers (such as Sean Miller, Tamara Chand, and Raymond Buch) drive a significant portion of top-line revenue.
- Actionable Strategy: Establish a dedicated B2B loyalty program or corporate account management structure to retain these high-value buyers and stabilize long-term revenue predictability.
